

Damaged beyond repair

A customer has had an accident with their Georgian cut candelabra, what remains of the antique piece can be seen below. Many pieces including the pans and canopies are broken beyond repair and we will need to have new blanks blown and our team will hand cut the replica pieces.

The base, top finial and a majority of the dressings are able to be used once they have had a number of small chips and bruises removed from them. The only piece that remained completely un-damaged was the central serpent arm and we will re-use all of the metalwork.

In a couple of months time we hope to be able to show you the restored candelabra alongside its undamaged twin to see if you can spot the difference!

LED bulbs

Don't forget that we have a wide range of LED's available to purchase, in a range of sizes, colours, wattage and cap size. Not only are they energy saving and cost efficient, but they are also becoming more of a necessity as the stocks of existing incandescent bulbs like the Girard Sudron E10 chandelier bulb dwindle as they are no longer produced.

Financial Times article

Did any of you see the article about us in the 6th/7th February Financial Times Weekend, House & Home supplement?

It was a wonderful article about the history of glass and chandeliers as well as the history of our company written by Jonathan Foyle who David has had the pleasure of knowing for some years. If you subscribe to the Financial Times online then you can read the article here -

<http://www.ft.com/articles>. If you don't subscribe make sure you keep an eye on the news page of our website where a copy of the article will soon be posted.

